INTRODUCTION

The Georgia State College of Agriculture

From 1907 to 1933, the Georgia State College of Agriculture flourished under a strong president, Andrew M. Soule. Although the State College was a part of the University of Georgia and was located on the same campus, it was virtually independent and reported to its own Board of Trustees. President Soule was an effective "empire builder." Before he arrived, the School of Agriculture had been a small, unimportant department of the University. He built it into a large and powerful college. In addition to a strong resident instruction program, the State College had an extensive agricultural extension program.

In 1932, a single Board of Regents for the University System of Georgia replaced the separate boards governing state colleges and universities. In the next few years, the University System was drastically reorganized. In changes announced in 1933, the name "Georgia State College of Agriculture" was dropped and the office of president of the College was abolished. The State College was broken into several separate divisions within the University including the School of Home Economics, the College of Agriculture, and the Cooperative Extension Service. Also, President Soule was forced to retire.

Georgia State College of Agriculture Bulletins and Circulars

The fact that the State College had its own publishing program separate from that of the University shows its independence. Before the GSCA Bulletin and Circular were started, the State College issued academic and extension publications in the Bulletin of the University*. After the State College was broken up in 1933, its former divisions again issued academic publications in the University Bulletin. After the reorganization, the Extension Service continued to publish the Bulletin and Circular to distribute its publications.

The Circulars were numbered sequentially with "circular" numbers from the first. Originally, Bulletins were numbered with volume and issue numbers. At the beginning of the third volume, sequential "bulletin" numbers were assigned as well. Eventually, volume and issue numbers were dropped. Except for Volumes 1 and 2 of the Bulletin, the Bulletins and Circulars may be identified uniquely by their serial numbers.

The FAMULUS Personal Information System

FAMULUS is a computer program package developed by the Pacific Forest and Range Experiment Station of the Forest Service in the late 1960's. It is described well in the "Software Review" in Computers and the Humanities 10:233-234, 1976. The version of FAMULUS available here is not as sophisticated as the one described in the review. FAMULUS allows the user to manipulate computer files and to produce printouts from them. The FAMULUS Sort program was used to create the two sorted lists--by title and by sponsoring department--in this index. The listings were produced using the FAMULUS Galley program with the output directed to an IBM 6670 Information Distributor ("laser printer").

The Index

The main source of information for the index is the 35mm microfilm copies of Extension Service Bulletins and Circulars produced by the Southeastern Land-Grant College Library Microreproduction Project.* Items listed in the index appear on the film UNLESS OTHERWISE NOTED. The second source consulted was the bound sets in the University of Georgia Science Library. The bound sets prepared for the GSCA Library, which are now in the Soule Collection in the University of Georgia Archives, were also consulted. The sets in the Soule Collection were organized as volumes of "Bulletins and Circulars" and "Catalogues and Reports" arranged chronologically with issues from the Bulletin and Circular series intermingled. The sets in the Soule Collection do not appear to be any more complete than the collection on the film and their arrangement makes them very hard to use.

* The following microfilm collections include GSCA Bulletins and Circulars indexed here:
University of Georgia. Agricultural Extension Service. Report.
University of Georgia. College of Agriculture. Report of the Congressional District Agricultural Schools of Georgia.
University of Georgia. Agricultural Extension Service. Circular.
University of Georgia. Agricultural Extension Service. Bulletin.

The citations in this index contain six types of information (fields in the computer file):

1. The year of publication.
2. The volume and issue number, if any.
3. The sponsoring department or program. If no specific department was shown as the sponsor, "Agriculture, College of" was used.
4. The title. That field contains both the title and the name of the author. I did not hesitate to supply "by", "and", or punctuation where I thought that the addition would make the title more clear. Also, the titles are not necessarily transcribed literally. I changed the order of parts of titles and made changes in wording to cause related issues to fall together in lists sorted by title.
5. The serial number. Circulars were numbered sequentially from the start. Bulletins were numbered sequentially beginning in Volume 3 starting with Number 78.
6. Notes. These include notes to clarify other parts of the citation or to explain where the issue was found.
